

30+ developments transforming New Jersey's Hudson River waterfront

BY EVAN BINDELGLASS

With all the activity happening along the Manhattan side of the Hudson River—the World Trade Center, Hudson Yards, and the like—it can be easy to forget that there's a slew of construction projects happening on the other side of the water.

But there is, in fact, a veritable building boom in New Jersey right now, particularly the stretch along the waterfront between Fort Lee (to the north) and Bayonne (on the southern end). The developments going up run the gamut from small rental buildings to the state's soon-to-be-tallest skyscraper, and each will have a part in transforming the state in the next few years. Here, we've mapped more than 30 of those projects; if we've left any out, let us know in the comments.

4 The Avenue Collection

The Avenue Collection includes both 1000 Avenue at Port Imperial and 1200 Avenue at Port Imperial. Developed by Lennar Urban, the two buildings have a combined 177 luxury condominiums, and 1000 is already sold out. Prices at 1200 range from $799,000 to $3.925 million.
